An Imperious Clerk Runs Against the Wrong Man.

Remarkable Improvement in the Condition of Our Foreign Trade.

The Balance in Favor of the United States Increasing Rapidly.

Democratic Scheme to Encourage Bayard as Finance Chairman.

Proposition to Remove All Clerks of Democratic Proclivities.

Special Dispatch to The Tribune.

Washington, D. C., July 5.—An amazing incident occurred at the State Department Thursday. That Department is a high-toned establishment. On Thursday two gentlemen and three ladies entered the Passport Bureau. The clerk with a haughty air had the visitors to take seats. The mandate was obeyed. After a pause the clerk asked if they wanted passports. One of the gentlemen, with more courage than his companion, responded that his friends did. The clerk then sharply scrutinized the visitors, and said that he did not know them, and he should require the guarantee of some reputable person as to their good character. "I would like to speak for these gentlemen and these ladies," modestly said the spokesman of the party. "And who are you?" demanded the clerk imperiously. "My name is David St. Key," was the reply. It is needless to add that the Postmaster-General and his friends were completely overwhelmed with obsequious attentions.

From reports made to the Treasury Department, it appears that during the last six months the increase in the national resources in the matter of excess of exports amounted to $105,000,000. At this rate the excess for the year would be about $300,000,000. From these facts the inference is made that for the fiscal year the returns will be substantially as follows: Domestic exports, $600,000,000; foreign exports, $12,400,000; total exports, $711,000,000; imports, $441,800,000; excess of exports over imports, $269,200,000. With every prospect of extraordinary crops in this country and of short crops abroad, it may fairly be said that the excess for the last half of the year 1879 will probably be larger than the excess for the first half of the year.

BAYARD.

The Democratic opponents of Senator Bayard have formed the plan of increasing the Finance Committee by two, so that it would be possible for Bayard to form any combination with the Republicans. This presentation, however, is unnecessary, as the Republicans were united only in opposition to the Warner bill and like measures, for the reason that it was not thought to be politic to do so before the Ohio campaign. Next winter some of the doubtful Senators on the Finance Committee will not consent to a postponement of action on the Warner bill, but will insist upon disposing of it.

OHIO.

Ex-Congressman Southard, of Ohio, arrived this morning from Columbus. Mr. Southard says that both parties are very confident of success in October. He thinks that a large vote will be polled, as there is a general conviction that the coming campaign is closely connected with the Presidential election.

REMOVALS DEMANDED.

There are reports that all the Democrats in the Department, and there are a good many of them, are to be removed. The members of the Republican Congressional Campaign Committee are certainly anxious that it should be done, and there are indications that it will be so. Some of the Democrats are in the present attitude of the Democratic party towards the Republicans and the Administration warrants the restoration of the Democratic principle that to the victor be long the spoils.

SENATOR TRUMPLIN.

SUNDAY, JULY 6, 1879.

Many of the leading business men of this city who were interviewed yesterday are emphatic in the expression of the belief that Mayor HARRISON has made a grave mistake in dismissing Fire-Marshal BENNER. Amongst the insurance men a petition asking his reinstatement is talked of, but the plan has not assumed definite shape.

The deposed Sultan of Turkey, who, after being kicked out of the throne, was placed for safe keeping in one of the palaces and guarded, has effected his escape, and there is considerable excitement over the fact in Constantinople. Being a monarch out of a job, and with no available means of governmental powers to aid him, it is doubtful whether the fugitive can do anything.

In these days of dullness in Washington, the officials and clerks at nearly all the Departments have easy times. There is practically nothing to do anywhere, with the exception of the Treasurer's and Register's offices, where the clerks have to do double duty in the exchange and redemption of bonds. The demand for the new 4 per cents is daily increasing, owing to the receipts of large amounts of refunding certificates.

Ohio politicians, dropping into Washington nowadays, predict the polling of an unusually large vote at the coming election in that State. Both parties, they say, are confident of success.

Which may be the present condition of affairs; but there is nothing surer than the fact that one of these parties is doomed to disappointment, and it wouldn't be as difficult as to secure a certainty on a combination in a horse-race to wager which it will be.

There would appear to be a prospect of a wholesale slaughter of Democratic innocents in various Government Departments at Washington. It is probably a course that would be summarily pursued toward Republican employees were the Democracy in power to make changes, and the Republican National Campaign Committee believe that it would be no more than fair to treat the former to a dose of the medicine which they are always ready to administer.

A very clever march was stolen on the Canadians by a Detroit military company. The latter were invited to Chatham, but the Dominion Government forbade their entering Canadian territory with guns in their hands. They went to Chatham, left their guns on the boat, and marched ashore without arms. Then a squad of Chathamians went on board, took the guns ashore, and placed them in the hands of the soldiers. The sleepy Canadians had better wake up.

JAY GOULD departed for Europe very suddenly yesterday, and of course Wall street is in a flutter. There are scores of rumors as to the meaning of his voyage, and the "knowing ones" shake their heads mysteriously. The Railroad King himself says he goes for pleasure purely; but it is difficult to make New Yorkers believe it, for he is a man who takes no rest, and hardly knows what recreation means. From this time on railroad-stock operators will no doubt act cautiously, at least until Gould shows what kind of a game he is playing.

The depressed condition of the agricultural interest in Great Britain has finally occasioned the appointment of a Commission by Parliament to investigate its causes. This master has developed a vast amount of discussion on the other side of the water, and if the interposition of a Government Commission can accomplish anything that will alleviate the condition of the farming class it will be more than has ever been done before. The same end has been sought to be reached at least three times before during the present century in England, and on each occasion the result has been failure. Good crops and the demands of foreign nations, together with moderate rents and an opportunity to compete with large producers in other parts of the world, are the essential elements in the prosperity of British agriculture. More small land-owners, and fewer great landlords who are masters of the situation, would also aid in solving the problem.

Gen. GRANT had at last accounts reached Nagasaki, Japan. The Emperor had sent him word that he desired that the Imperial reception should be the first event to take place in honor of his arrival in that country, and when that was over other cities in the island would be at liberty to visit with each other in accordance with the general compunctions which their customs permit. Japan is peculiarly intimate in its relations with the United States, and its people being progressive to a wonderful degree, have put into practice very many of the better phases of our civilization and principles of government, which have had a marked effect. Those of our representative men, from civil or military walks of life, who have visited Japan and been received, those with dignified grandeur, have brought back pleasing accounts of the thrift and enterprise, shrewdness and learning, distinctively progressive commercial character, of its people. They have manifested a desire to advance their civilization and catch up with their foreign brothers, and towards the United States particularly there has been manifested a degree of friendliness which has caused them to be admired.

THE BREWER CASE.

There is one newspaper in Chicago that seems determined to sustain HARRISON, right or wrong, in everything he does. The present business of Mr. HARRISON's organ is to treat the removal of BENNER as the result of a political intrigue on the part of the managing Republicans to get up a row with HARRISON and injure his Administration.

Such a theory is certainly not very flattering to Mr. HARRISON, since its success in securing the removal of BENNER with that purpose would indicate that the Mayor had fallen an easy victim to the snare that had been set for him. The intimation is really ridiculous, however, for the distinguishing characteristic of BENNER's control of the Fire Department has been his determined exclusion of all political influences over its management and its membership. Aside from BENNER's natural gift for fighting fires, his personal opinion in every emergency, his perfect familiarity with the conditions of every notable building in the city, and his large experience as a fireman, it is probable that he has done more to improve the condition of the Department than his obstinate opposition to all political pressure than by any other incident of his official career. Hence it is really ridiculous to hint that he has lent himself willingly, or unwittingly been used, to clash with the Mayor on any partisan ground. It is much more plausible to assume, with the knowledge of Mr. HARRISON's disposition of the city's patronage for partisan purposes, that one of his motives in removing BENNER is to make of the Fire Department a party machine, a condition which could not fail to destroy its usefulness.

Another consideration urged to quiet the popular protest against BENNER's removal is that the city should not be dependent upon any one man for the management of the Fire Department, and that there are possibly just as fit men as BENNER for the duties and responsibilities of Fire Marshal. This view of the case is almost too puerile for serious treatment. Would any business man dismiss a well-tried servant, charged with important interests, in order to experiment with some other untried servant, upon the theory that there must be just as good fits in the sea as ever were caught? If it is admitted that there are other available men in Chicago who, after some special drilling and considerable experience, might prove to be efficient, it is a reason why BENNER should be dismissed upon insufficient provocation.

Another consideration urged to quiet the popular protest against BENNER's removal is that he has done more to improve the condition of the Fire Department under his control than any other.

There are possibly some 9,000,000 of voters in the United States, and of these the Socialists may count up 250,000; but we do not suppose this comparatively small number intend that their grievance can be remedied so long as the other eight and three-quarters millions of people persist in having elections on some other day than Sunday, and persist in voting without wages. Under our Election law the time needed for voting requires but a few hours each day, and there are but few employers who will not give their workmen time enough to vote, and then, too, the polls are by law required to be kept open one hour after the stoppage of work.

The fact is that the popular dissatisfaction with Mayor HARRISON's Administration extends among the Democrats as well as the Republicans, and there are abundant reasons to account for it without setting up any partisan opposition, which really has nothing to do with it. Mr. HARRISON began by promising to be "Mayor of the entire city," which was a virtual acknowledgment of his obligation to Republicans as well as Democrats, and implied an intention on his part to manage the affairs of the city to the best of his ability, without regard to mere party interests. But he encountered a pressure from the party bums which he was not prepared to meet with the proper resistance. He permitted himself to be persuaded and bullied into the belief that he was primarily Mayor of the Democratic party, and he began to make such changes in the personnel of the City Government as threatened to prostitute the entire patronage of his office to the service of the Democratic party. This was not what the better class of citizens, whether Democrats or Republicans, wanted or expected of Mr. HARRISON. But it encouraged the ward-politicians—the loafers, bummers, and vagrants of his party—to fasten upon him till he himself was a respectable citizen and large taxpayer, would manage the affairs of the city in a conservative fashion, caused an important defection from the Republican ticket in his favor. All the Republicans who voted for Mr. HARRISON would gladly justify their action by sustaining his Administration if they could only do so.

THE TIRED WOMAN'S REPTATE.

Here lies an old woman who always was tired,
For she lived in a house where help wasn't hired.

Her last gasp on earth were, "Dear friends,

Where washing isn't done, nor churning nor sewing."

And everything will be just to my wishes,

For when they don't eat there's no washing,

But, having no voice, I'll be rid of the singing,

Don't mourn for me now, nor mourn for me never,

For I'm going to do nothing for ever and ever."

TELL ME, WHERE DOETH BEAUTY DWELL?

Tell me where doth beauty dwell?

Is it in the rounded swell
Of her bosom—tinted cheek,
Smooth and soft, and white and meek,
Seek to ride as in a chariot?

Yet only add another charm,
Not in the rounded cheek,
But in the sweetest language speak.

Tell me where the great charm lies?
Is it in the liquid language, breathe,
Soft as flowers perfumes wreath,
Soul of the song of Spring their hand,
Replete fragrance, and the land?

Not—it is not in her eyes,
That the charm of Beauty lies.

Tell me, lies on her lips,
Like the rose, half-opened, where sips
The bee with such intuitions joy,
With the sun, the sun, the sun, the day,
Until, ambition gone, he lies?

Within that bower, and drinks, and dies?

Not—it is not in her eyes,
That the charm of Beauty lies.

Soul within me, tell me now,
Is it on that noble bower,
White as snowflakes, midnight-born,
Gleaming in the eye of morn,
That the charm of Beauty lies?

Not—it is not in those crowning folds,
Beauty her throne and kingdom holds.

Not dreamy eyes, nor smiling lips,
Nor bower, nor dimpled cheek,
Nor bower, nor dimpled cheek,
Nor bower, nor dimpled cheek,
Nor bower, nor dimpled cheek.

Not within those crowning folds,
Beauty her throne and kingdom holds.

SOME MORE "BIFF."

The following satire upon the realistic tendencies of French authors, by Abraham Dreyfus, the celebrated novelist, appears in a recent number of Le Globe, and is translated for The Tribune:

"We believe that Len Grover is responsible for the origin of the word 'biff' in its present connection. It became here a sort of the theatrical vocabulary. It has traveled or rolled from city to city, until finally it has turned up in Paris. Can it be possible that Dreyfus had 'Out Fit' in his mind's eye when he wrote this?

"Then you won't play it?" said the young dramatist.

"Oh! how it all! If I should play it what would it amount to? I've played many like it."

"That's all I ask; it isn't much!"

"My representations! You are modest!"

"Yes."

"No more!"

"I know my business, and I tell you the piece won't do."

"What does it want?"

"What does it want? I've told you. It wants a 'biff'!"

"Biff?"

"Yes; such effect. A bit of sensation. The thing which makes every one say, 'Let's go to such and such a theatre; there's the biff there!' is the sensation we are to have."

"Ah, yes, it indeed wants a 'biff!'" and the speaker rolled his eyes in glee at the ceiling.

Thus Mr. Dreyfus, the director of a Paris theatre conversed with Mr. Alexs Chaundroid, the author of a piece which was then being rehearsed at the Lyceum, and on which the management had founded the greatest hopes. These hopes had diminished from day to day, as indeed they had ever existed. Trubert had taken up the piece because he had nothing else to play. Chaundroid was not deficient in talent. His piece was tolerably interesting, and the actors united in saying that it was well written. Unfortunately, Chaundroid had no reputation.

"You said that the little Ferdinand Duchesse was even less known than Chaundroid, and still 'The Sirene de Bougival' drew 300 or 300 from the boxes when they contested 120 games."

"Yes; 'The Sirene de Bougival' was played by Castro and Castro in the second act, and it was indeed a success."

"She is all right; doing well. It is a biff!" exclaimed the enraptured grandfather. "But it is a fraud of the first water, and it is going to be a failure."

"Certainly," mechanically replied Trubert.

"I'll send a dispatch to the telegraph office and send a dispatch to the newspaper."

"Then you won't play it?" said the young dramatist.

"Oh! how it all! If I should play it what would it amount to? I've played many like it."

CHICAGO.

BOUTIQUES FAIL TO CONNECT. It is not alone from a business point of view that the average Chicago man is ahead of his St. Louis brother; his enterprise is fully as great in matters of society, and love, and courtship.

A case illustrating this statement has recently come to light, which shows the superiority of the Illinois to the Missouri boy in nerve and staying qualities in the social rôle—not that it is meant by this assertion that the Chicago representative has any more sang-froid, is any more of a bore, or that he has any more density in his make-up to enable him to sit complacently and inconvenienced under the hydraulic pressure of a hint; but that by tact, ingenuity, and knowledge of the ways of women, a Chicago young man was enabled to capture a beautiful girl for a wife from the very threshold of the Actresses of the Big Bridge. This is the way the Illinois boy did it:

On a stylish street of the West Division there lived a merry maiden and a gallant youth. They were near neighbors, and both occupied high social positions. She was very attractive to the opposite sex, and the young man was a studious, although he never confessed his love, being either too timid, too uncertain, or too young. The young lady at last made preparations to pay a visit to the Misses Blair, near St. Louis, last summer. She was to be absent several months, and when she parted with her neighbor they made each other good-by as friends.

FINANCIAL.

The demand for Government bonds in Chicago was only moderate. Transactions were on the basis of Thursday's quotations. The 4 per cent were 101 1/4, bid and 103 asked. Refunding certificates were 102 1/2 bid. The rest of the list was very easily dealt in, and prices were as before quoted. The bond market in New York is described as follows by the New York Public:

The market for United States 4 per cents has shown much better, with a gradual advance in price, though there is still a great and wide difference to be made. The 4 per cent "short" still appears to exceed in amount all purchases on speculation, and the 3 per cent even less. The 3 per cent are also rather popular, though not with success, to depress the price. Demand for the bonds with short time to maturity is to be increased, and the whole market will find that a considerable part of the $50,000,000 destined for interest and dividends will be required to meet the demands of those in Government employ, concerning whom we will probably preserve a discreet silence—

Grease was quiet at $0.00 6/35 for No. 1 wheat, 4 1/2/40 for good yellow, and 4 1/4/40 for brown.

Best products were quiet at $0.00 6/35 for mes, $10.00/10.35 for extra mes, and $15.50/19.00 for ham.

Tallow was quoted at 5% 1/2/40 for city, and 5% 1/2/40 for country.

There was a fair inquiry for grain carriers yesterday, and several charters were made at 14¢ for corn to Buffalo, and on through rates, which were unchanged. Agents asked 2¢ for corn vessels, and some of them refused to take anything less.

The Cincinnati Price Current gives the following statement of the number of hogs packed since March 1 this year and last:

Chicago, 1878. 1877.
St. Louis. 110,000. 140,000.
Cleveland. 120,000. 87,000.
Cincinnati. 126,813. 95,725.
Des Moines. 36,691. 91,764.
Milwaukee. 26,500. 18,200.
Other places, approximately. 225,000. 140,000.

Total. 1,079,304. 1,811,709.

In the dry-goods market there was a quiet feeling. Very few buyers were present, and the volume of mail orders was light. Prices were firm throughout the list. Groceries met with a fair inquiry, and the market was strong as last quoted. The boot and shoe trade remained quiet, but prices display great firmness, the tendency being unmistakably upwards. Prices of dried fruits ranged the same as on Thursday. Fish also were quoted unchanged. In the butter and cheese market there was not much stir, and values remained weak and uninterested. A fair demand for dried fruits, and former quotations were very generally adhered to. Some dried fruits continuing steady. Lathes was firm. Tobacco was moving with fair liberality, and was quoted firm. No changes were noted in the coal and wood market.

Lumber was fairly active at the yards. Dealers were filling old orders, and received about the usual quota of fresh ones. They report no cessation in the country demand. The receipts are heavy, and many think the season's discounts will be continued, capital will remain sh

new issues will be limited.

The Return of the Chamber—Proposed Illumination of the City.

Disgraceful Episode at Versailles—Rowdyism and Riot—Expulsion of Paul de Cassagnac.

The March of Sabatini—New Piece at the Théâtre—A Biblical Drama—New Books—A Joke.

Special Correspondence of The Tribune.

PARIS, June 18.—It is the fashion for journalists to treat their readers every now and then to a long résumé on the fondness of the French people for fêtes and fireworks. Between ourselves, though there is undeniably a foundation of truth in this, there is raised upon the most magnificent structure of nonsense. We certainly enjoy a festival when it comes in the natural course of things, as much as, or more than, other nations do. But, before we jump to conclusions, as the papers would make one suppose, that there is a periodical clamor and complaint amongst us about the rarity of those spectacular displays which went so far to assure the transient popularity of the Empire and the misfortunes of the French nation. Perhaps the only persons really exercised about the master are—the gentlemen of the press themselves. At all events, it is curious that all these suggestions of merrymaking and riot come from the journalists. The working-classes don't grumble about such things, and, I am convinced, would prefer to have the cost of all public rejoicing added to their wages. However, as I said, it is the fashion to agitate for more greasy polos and Catherine-wheels every now and then; so there is no cause to be specially astonished at Emile de Girardin's last "idea."

WE WANT US TO ILLUMINATE
On the night the Chambers return to Paris. To what a pass must Paris have come when it can find no better pretext for illuminating than the return of about 800 rowdy or incapable legislators to the Palais Bourbon! Upon my word, there is something sublimely ridiculous in the thought, after the scenes that have just been disgracing the Chambers at Versailles. And, of course, as it is so sublimely ridiculous, it will be caught at directly. On the Saturday we shall be all Venetian lantern and bunting; but on the Sunday it will be all Gallic lampoon and banting again.

THE THEATRE
A Congress, formed of the members of the Chamber and Senate, has been called for to-morrow to give the final vote on the subject; but we know beforehand what the result will be. The Right or Conservative and Reactionary side of the two Houses is opposed to the recapitulation of Paris. The whole Republican party, with the exception of part of the Left Centre, is favorable to it. M. de Labourde, whose American sympathies are so notorious that he has been sarcastically dubbed the "American Senator," is the chief opponent to the scheme; which will certainly be adopted in spite of him. M. de Cassagnac, who good, sensible rentiers does not care to alienate, is concerned about his prospective confine. He comes to the Café Voltaire every day with the same unrefined boy and Quakerish calm, sips his coffee peacefully as he reads the violent attacks made upon him by the Radical press, smokes a pleasant pipe with remarkable cheerfulness, and goes off to Versailles re-freshed.

It really appears to me that
THE THEATRE
A little boy is addressed by his mother, who is in an "interesting" situation: "My dear, I am Hopetree for some moments, and replies: "Well, mother, you see I've got a brother already. It's the same to you, couldn't you let me have a horse?" HARRY MEZZER.

ers—only ended when M. Gambetta, putting on his hat, suspended the "sitting."

In the interval of the suspension and the resumption of business, the most shameful disorder prevailed in the lobbies and committee-rooms. Thirty or forty Bonapartists—with M. Ronde, another of them, in possession of room number 100, the largest of the suite, refused to quit, until M. de Mably, the Queen, gave orders to have the soldiers called in. Seeing to what a pass things had come, M. Gambetta telegraphed to the Prefect of Police for an additional force to be sent down, and the body of gendarmes which is always stationed at Versailles to defend the town was not under arms, and stood ready to execute orders. Eight hundred men, under the command of old Col. Ronde, were specially detailed for collaring any Deputy whom it might be found necessary to eject; and, when these preparations were made, the meeting, which was to be held in the hall of the Council, was summoned to explain its insolent remarks and retort.

RETRACTED EVERYTHING,
however, by so doing he might be allowed another chance to make his bones for his affected humility did not avail. The Republicans were too disgusted and enraged at the license and impudence of the bull, and M. Gambetta, who had been present, and who was the author of the rules of the House provided in such case, to "cease with three days' extension." The proposal was voted by acclamation, and in five minutes more Paul, after a short speech, was gone. Before he went, he hurled one more piece of Billingsgate at the Government, however.

"The Government is infamous," he said. "The Government is infamous," he repeated, addressing the committee in a tone which the command of old Col. Ronde, were specially detailed for collaring any Deputy whom it might be found necessary to eject; and, when these preparations were made, the meeting, which was to be held in the hall of the Council, was summoned to explain its insolent remarks and retort.

A RIDE ON A SAFETY-VALVE.
"Jimmy Carr came to America in 1855," says the Cincinnati Enquirer, "and took up his abode in this city soon afterward. Liking the country, he settled here to work at his business of machinist and engineer, and was always a good citizen and a faithful employee. He was rather fond to be the captain of arms when he went into the navy, enlisting as assistant engineer on the steamer of the West, a freight boat which had been bought by the Government and altered into a 'ram' here to Cincin-

nat. The vessel, which was under command of Capt. Elliott, was ordered South, and it was at the battle of Memphis that Jimmy Carr met with that particular adventure, which made him a hero to the people of this city, and gained the title. We give the tale as he tells it.

"It was on the 6th of June," said Jimmy, "that Memphis was taken. I remember it well. We were in the river, and I was in a boat, and I can tell you, we were in a terrible way. We were above Memphis, and the Queen was a volunteer that morning. Early in the day we got orders to move to the town, the Rebels having taken it, and so soon as within sight of the "Jennies" opened fire on us. Our Captain called on Curtis, the first engineer, to let loose, and he did, and we were soon steaming down the river.

WE WEREN'T LONG UNDER WAY UNTIL WE HAD 150 POUNDS OF STEAM ON, AND STILL RYING. CURTIS TOLD ME TO LOOK AFTER THE BOILERS—WE HAD TO TURN THEM DOWN, AND SO ON. THE FIRST THING I NOTICED WAS THAT THE SAFETY-VALVE HADN'T WEIGHED HEAVY ENOUGH FOR THE EXTRA PRESSURE, AND THE STEAM ESCAPED. I DIDN'T SEE ANYTHING WRONG WITH IT, SO I TURNED THE LEVER, BUT IT WAS NO USE AS IT WAS TUMBLED OFF IN A MINUTE OR TWO. BY THIS TIME WE MAY HAVE HAD FULL 200 POUNDS OF STEAM ON, AND SO ON. THE LEVER WAS TURNED, AND I SAW THAT IT WOULD NEVER DO TO ALLOW THE STEAM TO ESCAPE AS IT WAS DOING. I HAD TO THINK QUICK—WE WERE NOTHIN' BUT A BOAT, AND I COULD NOT TURN THE LEVER, BUT IT WAS NO USE AS IT WAS TUMBLED OFF IN A MINUTE OR TWO.
